

Date: 1/27/2018 11:10:51 AM

Subject: 050912

Watched the sun go down in Sedona for the last time last night. We couldn't see the sun itself, instead its reflection on the rock formations behind the hotel. The rocks went from red to glowing to burgundy. The clouds went from white to charcoal, but in layers, the black working up from the bottom pushing a layer of pink-orange into the white on top until the white was gone and the pink grayed out. And because the clouds were moving to the east we never saw one cloud change, rather we saw new clouds move through in different stages of transformation. As the rock went dark, bats came out and chased bugs. There was a half moon.

Saw Petrified Forest today. Forest? No. OK, logs. And yes they're petrified. If you steal one the fine is $275.

This bunny was petrified too. Naturally.

These guys were not.

D&S