Today we crossed southern Colorado and slipped into Utah.
Took some snaps along the way.
The new car did fine.

Did we say new car? Yeah, well, Murray's fine about it. You might call the new car a "Johnson County* Jeep". It has a ground clearance of 9.1", approach and departure angles in the 20's, and the suspension of an M1 Abrams; but it also has the appearance and brand aura that fits the Johnson County image. And believe me, Murray's fine about it. He knows it can take us places he couldn't and it carries 115,000 fewer miles. Trust me, he's... well actually we hope he's not trashing the garage.

*Johnson County Kansas, for those of you who are uninitiated into this peculiar residue of the 1800's Missouri-Kansas border war, is the object of envy and disdain in adjacent counties, especially those across the state line. While Johnson County is full of wonderful people like ourselves, it's perceived as being the home of rich snobs. Foul! Outrageous! Incomprehensible! Only partially true!
