Found WiFi. Sent Postcard. Left Abiquiu for tonight's destination: Liberal Kansas. Took our favorite route on NM 68 almost to Taos, US 64 through Eagle Nest and Cimarron and on to Raton, the place where the scenery disappears and the ravens become crows.

Just before Raton, on a vast flatland full of beef herds and bison herds and free roaming antelope, is the NRA Wittington Center. It is home to a museum and a library. And a gift shop. What the heck?

This guy guards the entrance. Unintimidated, we went inside.

And we bought some souvenirs. No, they don't fire projectiles. Now a philosophical quandary: is it alright to stay in a town called Liberal after visiting the NRA?

Tonight reality takes a big bite out of us when we take a big bite out of lettuce and other salad fixings from Dillon's. Home tomorrow.
