

Date: 10/9/2016 8:47:32 PM

Subject: Postcard

On our way from Bluff to Page we toured Monument Valley Navajo Tribal Park. Monument Valley is home to massive red rock structures which by now you should know attract us like magnets. There are some good views from US 163 if you can ignore the fences and wires. But the best rocks are in the Tribal Park. They have unobstructed sightlines and are viewed on a 17 mile drive that costs 20 bucks plus whatever car repairs you need afterwards. Two kinds of vehicles take this drive: high clearance and rental.

Bogie took our picture. Sort of. The camera was on his hood.

Seriously.

Little sales tables are set up at many of the photo-op pullouts. While we were looking at some Indian jewelry... OK, while we were buying some Indian jewelry, the Navajo artisan told us "There are coyotes around here. When they see which way you're going to go, they run out in front of you". "Well", we said, "we'll watch for them and be real careful." "NO", she snapped, "When they do that, drive 'em over! Them coyotes are no good!"

And there you are.

D&S

postcardsfromthesouthwest.com