Mescal is the name of Mexican moonshine made from the agave plant and packaged in discarded pop bottles. There are many varieties. For example, it may be flavored with orange peel, aged in oak or spiked with rattlesnake for medicinal purposes. We recommend using it to clean tar off your bumper then buy some tequila.

Today we hiked around Mescal Mountain. We started off on Mescal Trail, took Deadman’s Pass to Long Canyon and so back to the trailhead. It was an uneventful hike by Sedona core-trail standards which means we made a loop using three different trails and wound up where we started. Without any detours.

The sign was for mountain bikers. We thought it had other applications.

Sedona is a great place for celebrities. While we only saw two people on mountain bikes, we think possibly Lance Armstrong sped past us on the Mescal segment. Later along Deadman's Pass we saw Honey Boo Boo's mom. She didn't speed past us.

As we hiked along Deadman's Pass we wondered who died for that name. We now believe it was some casualty of the Sedona Cable Wars.

Ah, nature!
