Sunrise.

Today we headed east on the Rim Trail to Yavapai Point to find the Grand Canyon webcam. It's one of a group of southwest cams we visit often. Yavapai Point is also home to the Geology Museum. We don't do museums.

We saw a baby junco. It could hop and cheep but didn't seem to be able to fly. We're thinking coyote snack.

This museum was fun. All the mineral exhibits were closed but the gift shop was open.

Done shopping, we inquired about the camera and were directed here. Sumbitch was 5' tall.

That's a camera.

A female bighorn jumped a couple of ledges down from the rim. We stared at her. She stared at us. She won. We left.

Grand Canyon Village was a zoom lens shot away. We are staying in Kachina Lodge, the squarish building on the right.

We reserved a room on the parking lot side but the morons put us right on the canyon.

Starting toward Kansas tomorrow.
